A quick shell programming quiz

1. Write a program to create a local account for yourself if you do not already have a local account.

   You should use `useradd`.

2. Extend your program from the previous question to take any username as a parameter and then test to see if there is a local account in that name. If not, it creates a local account for that user.